Caroline Whitehead is an artist printmaker and illustrator. She studied Fine Art at the Ruskin School of Drawing and Fine Art, University of Oxford, and also has an MA in Sequential Design from the University of Brighton. She grew up in London, more recently spent 10 years living in Norway, and now lives in Hackney where she has a studio near London Fields and is a keyholder at East London Printmakers. Most of her recent prints are the result of many hours spent drawing specimens – preferably moth-eaten and crumbling – of anteaters, aardvarks, warthogs and all types of birds, in natural history museums.
